The Experts in Going Out of Business. Retiring. Moving.

Larry Vondrell

Deciding to retire and close a jewelry store after being in business for over 40 years can be an emotional task. And doing so profitably and successfully is not an easy one. But when Larry Vondrell of Von's in Findlay, Ohio was ready, Wilkerson was ready, too.

"I joined my father and my brother in the family business over 40 years ago," Vondrell said. "It became apparent that it was time make a change. My wife and I wanted to retire and spend time with our children and grandchildren.

"I've always known Wilkerson in the trade. They've been around forever. When I did my due diligence, talking to other liquidators, as well as suppliers and other jewelers, it became obvious that Wilkerson was the choice.

He adds, "Our consultants were the drivers for the sale. They raised the bar. We all tried to work as hard as them and they would always outwork us. Even toward the end when there was little oil in the lamps, they kept us energized and we kept going.

"Without question, our retirement wouldn't be possible if it wasn't for the success we had with Wilkerson and our consultants."
